Everything you need to know about going under the knife

A woman with her hair in a bun is hanging from a large, silver surgical scalpel blade. She is seen from the back, with her arms raised and hands gripping the handle of the blade. The background is a plain, light-colored wall.

Unless you've been hiking in the Himalayas or doing a Howard Hughes at home, it's unlikely that you've not kept abreast (forgive the pun) of the ongoing PIP breast implant saga, which has revealed a very ugly side to the cosmetic surgery industry. More than anything, it has highlighted the need for more stringent safety checks, which is why we think that this year's Beauty & Cosmetic Surgery Guide is more relevant than ever. We have spent months researching, double- and triple-checking credentials, snooping in surgeries, eyeballing staff, dragging our (clean) fingers across countless clinical surfaces and talking to former patients. 'Doctor Who's Who' (page 4) is your definitive guide to the very best surgeons, dermatologists and cosmetic doctors in the country – use it as your bible. If you decide to go off piste, check that your surgeon is registered with BAAPS, the British Association of Aesthetic Plastic Surgeons (baaps.org.uk or 020 7430 1840) or the American or European equivalent and, when checking information, stick to reputable websites like the Consulting Room (consultingroom.com) – an invaluable resource for news and comments on the wide range of cosmetic treatments. For readers who live further afield, we've compiled a concise list of the very best international surgeons (page 16), from an Italian body sculptor – Michelangelo eat your heart out – to the celebrities' favourite docs in Hollywood. We've also been busy testing hundreds of new lotions and potions. No Tatler staffers were harmed in the rigorous reviewing process, but grown men were made to wear facemasks. The results? The macho were converted to a more metrosexual grooming routine and only the products that made a visible difference to our skins made the final edit. Finally, for those who feel a surgical option is not for you, check out the cheat's guide (page 49), which gives the lowdown on innovative alternatives to keep you looking and feeling fresh. Remember, the anti-ageing game is all about cheating, but without the guilt.

A swipe of Chanel's Rouge Allure Extrait de Gloss in Insouciance, £25, is all our model wears in bed conveniently located just opposite Harrods (which is handy to scuttle into if you get caught on the street post-procedure). Rakus also offers a range of anti-ageing treatments for the whole body and is often the first to have the latest machines. She's a big proponent of Fraxel and Thermage and uses them to conquer crinkly décolletage and tone up thighs and tummies.

Consultation, free; Lip Ironing & Gloss, from £475 (drritarakus.com or 020 7460 7324).

Best for sun damage

DR JOHN CURRAN
COSMETIC DOCTOR

Offshore accounts aside, the Channel Islands' best-kept secret is probably Curran. A former president of the Cosmetic Doctors Association, he is a genius at correcting sun damage, which is handy in this part of the world – he has an outdoorsy clientele who are constantly jumping on and off their yachts. He is a big fan of Obagi skincare and peels, which nuke dark spots quicker than a Scud missile. He is also very up on the latest technologies, which he rigorously researches, and only cherry-picks machines that are proven to work. His latest toy is Intracel, a Korean import that uses radiofrequency, fractionalised laser treatment and needling to tighten and retexture the skin. See our review of Intracel on page 38.

Consultation, £55; Intracel, from £675 (askinclinic.co.uk or 01481 736699).

DR STEFANIE WILLIAMS
DERMATOLOGIST

This is the woman you need to see to undo the sins of the summer holidays. She uses a plethora of prescriptive creams with hardcore ingredients like tretinoin (a vitamin A derivative) and hydroquinone, which work wonders on mottled pigmentation, and a gel-needling treatment to tackle loss of elasticity. Williams also freezes off telltale sun spots on the hands with a special cryo pen (they look red for about four weeks before miraculously disappearing) and she's an expert at spotting pre-cancerous lesions. Her top tip for mild sunburn? Smother skin with Quark, a dairy product that looks like yoghurt and can be found in most supermarkets around the world. Apparently it's unbeatable for calming down redness.

Consultation, £195; gel needling, from £530 (eudelo.com or 020 7467 8500).

DR NICK LOWE
DERMATOLOGIST

As well as being a reassuringly distinguished dermatologist, Lowe is a pivot around which society girls flit – his waiting room is as ▷

WEARY FACES

THE SOLUTION New filler Emervel is hot off the block and already getting glowing reports from doctors who find it soft and easy to use. Designed to restore volume to the face (but avoiding the puffed-up pillow look), it's particularly popular with women and men who want a subtle pick-me-up before opting for a full-on facelift. An updated version of the two most popular fillers (Restylane and Juvéderm Ultra), Emervel works to swell cells with hyaluronic acid, a substance that acts like a magnet for moisture, attracting water from surrounding tissues and helping to give skin the desired volume. The whole thing is over in a flash: a 1mm-thick Pix'L cannula – a blunt-ended needle that reduces the risk of bruising – is taken down into the deep dermis (for fine lines) or below the muscle (best for cheek augmentation). At this stage, the filler is a sort of raw gel that seeps into cells, eventually softening as the water intake from surrounding capillaries increases. It's especially effective under cheekbones and around eye sockets (the first bits that start to look gaunt with age) and can also be used to fatten up thin lips and smooth out bony hands.

PAIN FACTOR Surprisingly minimal. Local anaesthetic is mixed in with the Emervel, which certainly takes the edge off. Nervous patients can have a topical cream applied beforehand, but as this can make the process considerably longer, the majority are happy to grin and bear it without.

DOWNTIME Fresh from the clinic, you might look a little flushed – this is a normal inflammatory response to the needle entering the skin – but mineral make-up can be used and swelling is rare. Avoid massaging skin for a few days as there's a slim chance that you could move the filler around. The best thing to do is to just forget about it completely.

RESULTS A procedure that promises great results, immediately. Skin looks better and better as the tissues become more hydrated, and will stay looking plumped-up and perky for around nine to 12 months.

WHO TO SEE Dr Ravi Jain at Riverbanks Clinic, East Hyde, Bedfordshire (riverbanksclinic.co.uk or 0844 704 7676), is one of the few doctors to pilot Emervel, and trains other doctors in its use. From £390.

RECEDING GUMS

THE SOLUTION The first permanent treatment to tackle unsightly gum lines, AlloDerm conceals exposed roots and minimises sensitivity in teeth. The procedure involves grafting new tissue straight onto a specific site where the gums have begun to recede, allowing the blood supply to regenerate and help regrow the gums. If the amount of work is minimal, tissue can be taken from the patient's own palate; for bigger problems a matrix is used (human skin from a tissue bank, where the DNA and epidermis have been removed, leaving a collagen-rich tissue, free from cells that could cause rejection). Tissue type determined, treatment begins: existing gums are gently lifted and the graft secured. The gum tissue is then stretched back over and fixed in place with micro-fine stitches. It sounds scary but you'll have a local anaesthetic and it's a speedy service, taking only 20 minutes a tooth.

PAIN FACTOR A dull ache similar to having had a filling. Post-treatment, the mouth is bruised and tender, so antibiotics and anti-inflammatories are prescribed to reduce swelling and minimise the risk of infection.

DOWNTIME It takes a couple of days to get fighting-fit again, so book in for a Friday appointment and hibernate over the weekend. You'll need to limit speaking for 24 hours and resist the urge to poke the area with your tongue, as too much movement will disturb the stitches. Swill with antiseptic mouthwash to keep the area clean and don't touch your toothbrush for a week, if you can bear it.

RESULTS Instant and hugely gratifying. Previously exposed roots will be hidden, although the gum line will seem slightly bulky until the new tissue begins to mature. Teeth will look their best six to eight weeks after the grafting is done and results can last a lifetime if you go to the dentist and hygienist regularly.

WHO TO SEE Dr Simon Darfoor at Darfoor Dental Practice, 1 Harley Street, W1 (drsimondarfoor.com or 020 7580 2294). From £450.

CREPEY SKIN

THE SOLUTION A serious non-surgical treatment that comes all the way from cosmetic-surgery hub South Korea. The Dalek-like Intracel machine landed on our shores at the end of last year and has been snapped up by two hot-to-trot dermatologists – Rita Rakus in London and John Curran in the Channel Islands. On paper, the procedure is deeply unnerving: a cocktail of the most daunting (but remember, most effective), cutting-edge anti-ageing technologies – radiofrequency, fractional laser and needling. Hang on in there, though, because this really works and is brilliant at tackling hard-to-hide turkey necks and jowly chins. The appointment kicks off with an application of anaesthetic cream to the soon-to-be-zapped area. It takes about an hour to properly numb the skin, so do bring your BlackBerry. The superfine gold needles on the Intracel device are then charged up with a radiofrequency current and applied to the skin, pinpricking their way over the furrows and lines to smooth them out. The current treats targeted parts of the dermis (under the skin) and doesn't burn or damage the epidermis (the top layer), so facial tissue is stimulated, collagen production is boosted and skin is tightened – yay!

PAIN FACTOR You might think this would hurt like hell, but our tester assures us it doesn't. At a push she said it stung a bit and smarted marginally more along her jawline than it did on the rest of her neck. Take a painkiller an hour before if you want to be on the safe side – Nuromol is the best.

DOWNTIME Downtime is blissfully minimal. No incisions, you see. Skin just looks a bit sunburnt and you are offered an ice pack at the surgery or a session under a cooling fan. You probably won't get away with going out that evening, but after a few days any pinkness will have died down and there is no dryness or flakiness.

RESULTS This is a step up from Thermage and Fraxel, and it's great if you don't want to take the leap to full-on surgery. A few days after treatment, everything starts to feel tighter and more toned, as if the skin is being gently pulled. The more sessions you have, the better – and younger – you look.

WHO TO SEE Dr Rita Rakus at 34 Hans Road, SW3 (drritarakus.com or 020 7460 7324). From £600 an area. Dr Rakus recommends three to four treatments at six-week intervals for up to six months, followed by a yearly touch-up.

DARK CIRCLES

THE SOLUTION Stylage is a hyaluronic-acid filler used on the Continent that has now arrived at the office of Dr Elisabeth Dancey (who, incidentally, doesn't have a dark circle or wrinkle in sight). What's exciting is that Stylage contains mannitol, a powerful antioxidant and tissue expander used in hospital medicine for rehydration. The mannitol protects the filler from rapid degradation so it lasts longer, and also protects the tissues from the effect of the injection, so there is reduced swelling. Under the eyes, it works brilliantly to pad out hollows, thus eliminating dark shadows. The bespoke treatment begins with Dr Dancy examining you sitting up, as well as lying ▷
